

rejoice as often as may be necessary. Also to a copy of another letter without date, from
And Solicitor records a few days after ward here with the following marks B The Defendant swears for to the truth is that until he received these two letters and saw the writ of Complainant he did not know that the mortgage was from death and to Richard having no show to direct him to search for it in the same conveyances of the

The Defendant the knowledge that the Complainant did call on him at his own house and gave him information that he had a mortgage on it and was in possession with it as subsequent to the bargain with Newton being concluded, and there cannot be extensive proof to show that the Defendant went voluntarily to his debt and should the Complainant the conveyances from Rose Torrens & Co. to the under which the bona fide purchaser of the premises. The Defendant even suffered the Complainant to carry the conveyances to his lodgings, telling the Defendant that they would be of service to him against Newton and a serving him as a man of honor that he would not put them on record or otherwise use them to the disadvantage of the Defendant. The Complainant did not return them for several days and so far violated the confidence reposed in him as to cause copies of them to be taken and authenticated by Plowden de la Cour by who is one of the subscribing witnesses to the original. The Defendant had the Complainant he says to much to say in which he asserts "That the Defendant was in

" by him previous to his bargain with Newton, and actually knew that the " Defendant had a specific lien on the premises" is totally void of truth and is therefore absolutely and positively denied by the Defendant.
The artifice and snares laid by the Complainant to his confederates to deprive the Defendant of not only the share now claimed but of the whole of the premises, this defendant conceives to be not only contrary to equity and good conscience, but highly unjust and censurable. In particular